Indigenous Women As Key Leaders in Environmental Scholarship, Stewardship, and Activism

Climate change and ecological degradation are challenges with impacts at all scales, from local to global. Mitigation, adaptation, management and rethinking carbon-heavy ways of life and "business as usual" will require creative tactics, solutions, and worldviews. As Indigenous knowledge keepers, advocates, activists, scholars, and key contemporary voices, Indigenous women are integral to finding new ways forward. In this panel, we listen, learn, and discuss about insights they can offer for improved environmental stewardship.
